Westerly Turkeys In Washington

Two Sent by Horace Vose Bring $75 at Auction—Successful Liquor Raid at City Pharmacy—Election Time in the Fraternities—Board of Trade's Annual Banquet in February.

The exhibit that attracted the most attention at the fourth annual show of the Columbia Poultry and Pigeon show, closed Saturday in Washington, D. C., consisted of two turkeys shown by Horace Vose of Westerly, the "Turkey king." These birds, full brother and sister to the gobbler sent for President Taft's Thanksgiving dinner, were sold at public auction on the closing day of the show.

By a cruel fate the Vose gobbler had been snatched away during his visit to the national capital. It had been the purpose of the officials of the exhibit to auction Zelaya alone, but they weakened and decided not to part Mr. and Mrs. Zelaya. The great birds, one weighing nearly fifty and the other over thirty pounds, were knocked down to P. B. Chase of Chase's theater for $75. He will send the birds to his farm in Mo.

When the auction of the Vose turkeys began there was a big crowd in the Washington Light Infantry armory, where the show was held. Thomas Owen, the auctioneer, announced that President Taft had been so much pleased with the Thanksgiving turkey that he had sent a representative from the White house to bid on the birds. Starting at $25, the price was worked up quickly to $75, and Mr. Chase was declared the owner.

The show was formally opened by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, who drew attention to the increasing interest being taken in the raising of poultry. He stated that the income from poultry and eggs for the fiscal year 1909 amounted to more than the income from the cotton, hay or wheat crops, and was, in fact, only exceeded by revenue from the raising of corn. As indicative of the growth of the industry, he cited the fact that the figures for 1909 were $281,971,000.

Chief Brandefer and Sergeant Brown raided the City Pharmacy Wednesday evening and secured two full bottles of whiskey, one bottle, half full of whiskey, jug containing three quarters of whiskey, and three empty bottles and a glass that had small quantities of whiskey therein, and two bottles of brandy.
